What's New in This Version: - Auto-Start - Minor Bug Fixes - Add "RocketFixio Premium" Option Quick Search Featured Programs Noisy Network Hardware We are having some problems with our Linksys wireless network. Both the router and the wireless network card in the laptop have their fan running all the time, even when nothing is connected. What's up? We are running Windows 7 Pro 64bit The problem is not just with the wireless network. The wireless Internet and the wired network connections are running even though we have nothing connected to the computer. The problem happens with the desktop and the laptop. A: If you have Windows 7 Ultimate then you should have the latest updates. If you don't - you can use Windows Update to get the updates. If you have Windows 7 Professional you have the older non-standard operating system that can't update directly from Microsoft - you need to use an old PC program called MSUpdate.exe to update it from within Windows. You need to reboot into Safe Mode to get rid of the virus if you are still in trouble after this. How to get to Safe Mode: Choose the Start menu and click Run... and enter the following command into the command window: control userpassive Click the OK button to make that command active and then restart your computer. You should be prompted for the Administrator password. If you cannot find the Administrator password (and you normally can) then run this command from the Start Menu again: control userpassive When you are prompted for the password then select Troubleshoot and enter the password required to continue. This program will attempt to remove the virus. You can then reboot your computer normally. A: You have plenty of software on your computer already. How do you know that some of these programs are the problem? Perhaps the CPU fan was already running during some period of time when you could have had open applications? Maybe the CPU fan runs at a higher speed when some of these programs are running. Your

RocketFixio Free Download: 1996 Bulawayo-Harare clashes The Bulawayo-Harare clashes occurred between 20 and 23 October 1996 in Bulawayo and Harare, in Zimbabwe. Opposition leader Morgan Tsvangirai and vice-president Arthur Mutambara had gone into self-exile in Botswana and South Africa respectively, fleeing prosecution after the March 1990 crackdown on the opposition. On 26 April 1996, the ZANU-PF government had announced that all opposition members in the country would be arrested on 23 October unless they surrendered to the police by 15 October. The arrests were made by the Central Intelligence Organization (CIO) rather than the regular police. Background By the end of 1996, the Zimbabwean government had arrested more than 400 opposition members. Zimbabwean newspapers carried a proclamation signed by President Robert Mugabe announcing a "state of emergency". Tsvangirai and his supporters, fearing arrest, had fled into exile to Botswana and South Africa respectively. Events On the morning of 20 October, President Mugabe delivered a radio and television address, announcing that anyone supporting the opposition would be arrested. He also warned the opposition that "war has been declared". This prompted an angry reaction from the opposition. Former Deputy Information Minister and ZANU-PF member, Phelekezela Mphoko, said: "We have had enough of being pariahs. Now they are declaring war against us. We will teach them and any other enemy a lesson in the fight for freedom." On the same day, about 400 armed soldiers of the CIO's Fifth Brigade surrounded the home of war veterans, Joseph Tsigwed
