Dance Of Death Du Lac And Fey Update V1 1-PLAZA

Tap dancing with tap dancing! Suddenly there was a very lively interest in tap dancers have been performing in nightclubs and concerts and teaching for so long and have been such a wonderful part of the tap world that it seems strange they have not gotten more of the attention. This is because, for the most part, the American tap dancer has always been that of an ethnic look. In the fifties and early sixties, even when the music was so good, there was not a market for it. But the demand was so great, and so was the loss of tradition, that the Dance of Death Series was born, to bring back the renaissance of American tap dance. Tap was needed, and the tap dancer was no longer a curiosity or a sideshow, but it had to be accomplished by a working professional. To that effect, the Dance of Death Series of tap dance troupes was conceived. The first four shows, entitled The Dance of Death (1958), The Dance of Death (1961), The Dance of Death (1964), and The Dance of Death (1964), and The Dance of Death (1975), were presented by the Kress Trio was formed in the mid-fifties, its members were Cholly Atkins, Chuck Green, and Cholly's wife, Brenda, who had been a partner of Honi Coles in Old Time Hoofers. This trio was first directed by Cholly Atkins. They were joined in the mid-sixties by Bill Robinson and Nicholas Brothers, when the latter formed the Brothers Touch. All four prompanied to seek out dance opportunities and to create and produce performances of their own, regulately recruiting promising tap dancers to create a formidable new group called he Dance of Death. One of these dancers, Donald O'Connor, was a fine singer and lyricist and a successful composer. He often accompanied the Brothers with a small orchestra, and his beautiful "theme" of dancing was not without lyrics that could be called jazz, but, more specifically, tap. 5ec8ef588b
